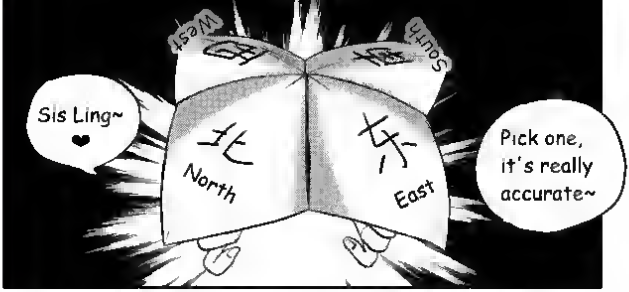
第一章 完

U17.com



I didn't know this game originated from Europe before translating it.

As you can see from the words above, in China four directions instead of colours are used. The game is thus called 东南西北, literally "East-South-West-North". As for the contents they usually have nothing to do with fortune telling, but some simple words like handsome, fatty, or Superman, etc. That's why Ming said "Since when...". However, in my translation I'll keep "paper fortune teller" as its name.

I feel the "stripes on arm" is also worth mentioning. That's the insignia system of Chinese Young Pioneers. Three stripes means Student Council (literally hattalion) memhers. The rest is not so relevant to the series so please google it should you he interested.
